Quinton "Q" Batton is a 17 year old senior at Morristown High School. After mentioning Q not feeling well after some of his basketball games the previous season during his physical, his doctor ordered some additional tests. Those tests revealed Q has AML (acute myeloid leukemia). He was told he will not be able to attend school or sports the rest of his senior year. He will be in Peyton Manning Children's Hospital for 6 to 9 months with little time in between to be at home. He is under the care of an amazing team of doctors and loved by the most supportive family, friends, and community.

Cancer and cancer treatments can put patients at risk for low red blood cell and platelet counts. Blood and platelet transfusions can enable patients to receive critical treatments needed to fight and survive cancer.
